

Power Move 2: Buyer Intel Development

The Tool: The "Seen & Led" ICA

Now that we have dismantled the hollow demographic profile, we can build a tool that actually works.

The Seen and Led ICA is not a biography. It is a decision map. It tells us what the buyer is protecting, what they believe, what moves them, and what hesitates them. This is the map that drives messaging, offer design, and experience.

To build one for your brand, define the following fields.

MOMENT-OF-NEED SNAPSHOT

What is happening in real life when they reach for help? What is the pressure in the room? What just broke, slipped, or got exposed?

STAKES THEY ARE PROTECTING

What matters most if this goes wrong? Reputation, capital, timeline, peace, control, momentum.

STORY THEY ARE TELLING

What do they believe is true about their situation and their options? What conclusions have they already drawn?

DECISION DRIVERS

What emotion makes them move toward a solution? Relief, certainty, pride, safety, momentum, control.

TRUST BREAKERS

What makes them stall or distrust a vendor in your space? What have they been burned by before?

BUYER LANGUAGE BANK

List 5 to 10 exact phrases they use about the problem, the outcome, and the fear underneath it.

ALTERNATIVES

Who or what are they comparing you to, including doing nothing? Another vendor, an internal hire, a cheaper option, a DIY route, or delay.

CONFIDENCE CUES

What signals competence to this specific buyer? Proof, credentials, case studies, clarity of process, speed of response, standards, and specificity.

FIT AND MISFIT RULES

State who this is for and who it is not for. This is not an exclusion for ego. It is stewardship.

THE BRIDGE TO CLARITY

Understanding your ICA is not an academic exercise. It is fuel.

From this map, you will extract the core elements of your messaging strategy.

- * 3 Messaging Pillars: the themes you repeat until the market can place you.

- * 3 Proof Types: the evidence you show early to satisfy their logic and lower perceived risk.

- * 3 Friction Removers: the things you simplify so the right buyer can say yes without a fight.

- * 3 Boundaries: the standards you enforce to protect the relationship and the outcome.

When you can see people this clearly, your writing stops sounding like fog. It stops sounding like generic marketing. It starts sounding like leadership.
