

Power Move 5: Make Your Voice Unignorable

Speak Your Message Loud & Clear

This is where you turn what you already decided into words you can deploy.

EXTRACT YOUR RAW VOICE

Write 10 lines the way you would say it out loud. This is not the place for polishing or cosplay. This is a place to just say the dang thing exactly as you would if you were talking to them across the table.

What do you actually believe about the problem your buyer is stuck in?

What do you wish someone would say to them plainly?

What are you tired of seeing in your category?

What standard are you restoring?

BUILD YOUR MESSAGE BANK (12 LINES)

You are creating reusable lines you can pull from without starting from zero.

Write them in your real voice.

One promise line.

Example: Established leaders stop sounding like the category and start sounding inevitable to the right buyer.

One proof line.

Example: Decisions are built off buyer intel, market reconnaissance, and standards that can be enforced.

One posture line.

Example: We don't pull punches. We roll up our sleeves and get to work helping you build your own powerhouse brand.

One principle line.

Example: Nothing gets sold that we don't stand behind 100%. If the work will not hold up under pressure, it does not ship.

One contrast line (we are not them).

Example: Most brand work is pretty packaging and vague language. This is identity that translates into conversions.

One stakes line (cost of staying stuck).

Example: Generic messaging turns marketing spend into noise and trains buyers to scroll past.

One misfit line (who this is not for).

Example: This is not for buyers who want trendy content, cheap templates, or a softer version of the truth.

One objection line (price, time, trust, complexity).

Example: The cost is not the work. The cost is the revenue bled when buyers cannot tell why this is the right choice.

One mechanism line (how it actually gets done).

Example: Promise, proof, posture, and principles get locked, then the voice gets codified into rules a team can repeat.

One boundary line (what will not happen).

Example: Standards do not get diluted to make the sale easier.

One credibility line (why trust is reasonable).

Example: This is built by operators who have shipped real work, protected reputations, and know what holds up in the market.

One call to action line (the next step).

Example: Start here: audit the last 10 messages and rewrite them like standards actually matter.5.3 | Kill the category phrases

Pull 10 phrases from your website, emails, or captions that sound like everybody.
Rewrite each one in your voice.

Rule: if it could sit on a competitor site unchanged, it's gotta go. Fix it. Rework it. Do what you need to do to ensure your people appreciate you being so uniquely you..

WRITE 3 HOOKS THAT DO NOT SOUND LIKE A TEMPLATE

Write one of each.

Stakes hook.

Standard hook.

Contrast hook.

Remember: Be clear over clever. Say it in a way that sinks in.

BUILD ONE POST, ONE EMAIL, ONE AD

Use the same core message.

Change only the wrapper.

Post (short)

Hook:

Point:

Proof:

CTA:

Email (short)

Subject:

Opening line:

Problem:

Standard:

CTA:

Ad (contrast)

Most options for [service] will tell you [X]. That usually leads to [cost]. We enforce [Y]. You get [Z]. Next step: [CTA].

EFFORT SIGNAL CHECK

Look at what you just wrote.

Does it sound like a real person with standards?

Does it feel edited, not generated?

Would the right buyer feel spotted?

Would the wrong buyer feel friction?

If not, rewrite until it does.

DEPLOYMENT PLAN (7 DAYS)

Pick one channel.

Pick one offer.

Pick one buyer.

Day 1: publish 1 post using your stakes hook.

Day 3: send 1 email using your standard hook.

Day 5: run 1 ad or outreach message using your contrast line.

Day 7: review replies and objections. Update your message bank.

Do not wait for perfect.

Show up like you mean it.